One of the reasons for the explosion of agricultural production in the Agricultural Revolution (which in effect continues today) was that it was fueled (and fueled by) the Industrial Revolution. New inventions and demands made farming ever more productive. Before the Industrial Revolution, agriculture workers labored six days a week, from sun up to sun down, just to keep their crops growing. 1 Certain seasons were more demanding than others, specifically the plowing and harvest seasons. 2 Because of the intensity and necessity of agricultural labor, it was the largest employment source in Europe. These workers would provide the labor for new industries during the Industrial Revolution. The Agricultural Revolution began in Great Britain around the turn of the 18th century. Agricultural and Industrial Revolution. Agricultural and industrial revolution as a theme of British History, use this theme, the timeline at the bottom of this page and map to explore these two tremendous and complex revolutions that changed 17th century Britain beyond all recognition. The agricultural revolution was a period of rapid agricultural development between the 18th century and the end of the 19th century. History of the Agricultural Revolution Search the site GO.

Industrial Revolution England was fed mainly through food imports and through switching agricultural output towards food, not through an agricultural revolution. This in turn implies output growth overall in the Industrial Revolution was lower.
